A message from the owners:

"In June 2012, my daughter Tracy and I, Sis Lavigne, embarked on our entrepreneurial journey. As former school teachers, we wanted to supplement our income and decided to turn our passion for organic eating and food preservation into a business venture. Our company, nestled in the charming town of Purdy on Washington State's Olympic Peninsula, is dedicated to specializing in organic pickles.

We are committed to sourcing our organically certified produce from Northwest farmers, ensuring that each product we create — be it dill and spicy cucumber pickles, asparagus, garlic, beets, bread and butter pickles, jalapeños, spicy and dill carrots, or onions — meets the highest quality standards. Our products are available at farmers markets, local stores, and online.

Our slogan, 'We make Purdy Good Pickles,' is a nod to our local roots and our unwavering commitment to quality. When you choose our pickles, you're not just enjoying delicious, organic products; you're also supporting two passionate small business owners. Thank you for visiting our site and for supporting our venture."

Current season:

We've had a bustling season, diligently packing 12 oz jars of dill chips and 32 oz jars of whole pickles. Currently, we're in the process of packing 16 oz jars of jalapeños, a blend of red and green varieties that are as visually appealing as they are delicious. Our organic pickling cucumbers and jalapeños are sourced from Alvarez Farms in Mabton, WA, with whom we've fostered a strong 13-year partnership. They are known for their exceptional, organically certified produce. Looking ahead, we anticipate the arrival of asparagus early next year.

On another note, due to the rising cost of garlic, we are making every effort to maintain affordable prices. However, this situation has led us to temporarily suspend the wholesale offering of our popular pickled garlic.

At Purdy Good Pickles, we're passionate about crafting high-quality pickles. As a staple at local Farmers Markets and community events, we're dedicated to bringing the freshest, most flavorful pickles straight from our farm to your store.
